Some weighters only take the actual loose, while others really plunder the bale; but be it much or little taken, all this is previous to weighing the cotton, and does not affect the buyer. After this the bales are stored in the shods ready for delivery to the broker on the factor's order.

The samples are taken to the factor's office, and are there placed on his tables for sale in a list with any others which he may think sultable. The question of arranging lists is one concerning only the factor, and sometimes is mere matter of chance with him, so that a list may have any number of bales, planters marks, and grades of cotton.

The broker having purchased a list of cotton, receives from the factor an order for delivery on the press where the cottom may be stored, and as soon as convenient sends his classer and markers to receive it. Delays may occur between the sale and the receiving of the cotton, caused by the brokers' clerks being busy on previous purchases, by rainy weather (for the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the series of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the ward there not between the law of the cotton has to be turned out into the cotton has to be turned out into the cotton has to be turned o

Further particulars of the burning of the D.M. Sechler have been received. The Sechler had arrived at Carrelland.

Sechler had arrived at Carrollton, Ky., about fifteen minutes before the fire was discovered, and nearly all her cargo had bren discharged. The fire was occasioned by the breaking of a coal-oil lamp in the wash-room of the chambermaid. She burned to the water's edge, and then sunk, and now lies in about ten feet of water. The machinery can be recovered. There were no lives lost. The officers and crew lost all their clothing. Capt. George had contracted to sell the Sechler to the new Kentucky River Bet. Front Row and Water Sis. Packet Company, recently organized in Louisville, for $5000. Hernew commander, Capt Dick Johnson, was on board when the fire occurred. The Sechier was built at Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1883, by Capt. Lodwick, and was owned by Capt. Thomas Vern, from Raymond City, Putnam county, West Virginia.
